Agree before the first round

Name the game and explain its ending before dealing. Offer a pass without asking for a reason. Give each guest the same chance to act, and finish a turn before changing activities.

Record earned points only after a complete result. Keep unrelated games' totals separate when their scales differ. Most Likely To and predictions are scoreless: a room's pick never adds points.

Use the activity's own tie rule. A tied Imposter vote lets the imposter escape. A tied question vote shares the pick with at least two votes per leader; below two votes there is no pick. In Draft, draw among tied highest bidders; compare party money after tied lineup votes and share exact ties.

For games with equal attempts, record successful turns and share a tied total. The winner certificate may also celebrate a clear explanation or a welcoming host; agree what the award means first.
